THE GIANT.

Our childhood fairy tales relate the story of the giant "Hunchback" and the girl who was his neighbor. The giant was so big and so strong that he could lift up a house and throw it into the air. He was so kind and so gentle that he would let the girl live in his house and be his neighbor. He was so good and so kind that he would let the girl live in his house and be his neighbor.

Years past and unknown to himself "Hunchback" had grown almost to the height of his old friend "Doubtful" and he turned his way homeward. Meanwhile "Doubtful" had grown to the height of his old friend "Hunchback" and he turned his way homeward.

Time will complete this fairy tale of modern days just as it did in the days of old. The giant "Hunchback" and the girl "Doubtful" will be remembered by the people of the world and the people of the world will be remembered by the people of the world.

Did you not read the letter of the brave Edgerton who wrote his mother of his brother's death? There were seven in his family and he was the youngest. He was the youngest of seven and he was the youngest of seven.

When the revolutionary war broke out one Englishman, let alone his Hessian ally, was as good as a commodity of colonial militia. Yet Washington crossed the Delaware on Christmas eve and captured the Hessian army and let the Hessian army be captured by the Hessian army.

Germany had numbers to start with and now the allies are about to be equal. Germany had numbers to start with and now the allies are about to be equal. Germany had numbers to start with and now the allies are about to be equal.

CIVIC NEEDS.

The Chamber of Commerce is filling a niche in civic matters that has long been vacant. It is a body of the people and it is a body of the people. It is a body of the people and it is a body of the people.

Apparently the English munition workers are tired of their jobs and think the nation too much employed to compel them to work or fight. They want to see before giving final judgment.

Congest traffic must be regulated unless the city is to have heavy damage suits on its hands before long. No one notices this daylight saving hour. It is to be proven we do not live by the clocks, after all.

ROCK.

Rock, Aug. 2.—The hub of the threshing machines are again heard to the country. Four machines began work Wednesday morning.

A splendid rain reached this vicinity Sunday afternoon and as a consequence everything has put on new life.

Frank Filmsack and family are enjoying a new car. Miss Esther Will from Johnsonville as the guest of the Misses Kelms.

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Noyes motored from Chicago and dare the guests of his mother. Mr. S. Kellogg motored to Madison Friday on business.

Daily Thought.

Every day, as it rises out of eternity, keeps putting to each of us this question: What will you do before this day has sunk into eternity and nothingness again?—F. W. Robertson.

by the million, the war use of zinc is great. It has further uses both for war and industry. The electric battery so necessary for telephones and telegraph depends upon zinc. Signal flags require it. War and industry call for so much galvanizing, and zinc is used for that. There is also medicinal use for the metal. Zinc, while one of the oldest metals in existence, is proving to be one of the newest, because we are only just learning its manifold uses.

It is believed that one of the German items seized here controlled the German output, and German interests extended over the world, dominating as it did Europe and in Australia. The latter is a small producer and German control there shows how thorough was the campaign to get all within the German fist.

"The metal is mined either alone or in connection with lead and silver, and is pretty well scattered over the world. The total production before the war was about 1,000,000 tons a year, the United States and Germany producing about half. German mines can produce enough for its own need, if it has the labor to mine and smelt it. Since the war our own production has been increased, and British Columbia and Mexico also supply some ore for our smelters. Our allies depend upon the outside world for their supply, and removal of German control from this country is an important step, not only for us but for them."

Yet we here at home in Rock county fail to understand the real depth of the Teutonic mind in planning and preparing for this war long before it began.

FAIR PLAY IN WAR.

The old saying states that "Anything is fair in love and war." Still for a good many centuries there has been a certain feeling of fair play in warfare. Honorable men have looked at it as a form of game, in which you could not go beyond certain rules.

So when it has been reported that the Germans were rigging up their airplanes to look just like those of our allies, it is not strange that the Americans refer to them as "dirty dogs." One can scarcely think of an American aviator resorting to a trick like that. A certain reputation for unfair play would make him think him under rather than his own true colors.

When the Germans resort to stratagems contrary to all decency, it is an indication that they are getting toward the end of their tether.

Our boys will be quick thinkers on the battle field, and will be very sharp to size up the tricks the Germans try to put over. They will laugh at a good deal of the stuff the Huns will pull on their heels. Our boys will place their reliance principally on manly fighting and heroic deeds of valor.

Their training in sport will help them here. They have been used on the ball field from early years to meet tricky players and to size up and block their game. It will be the same in war. The tricky fighter will stand no better chance than the tricky ball player.

War is not won by smart little dodges like imitating our airplanes. That style of fighting will only serve to anger the opposing army, and nerve them on to stop that style of fighting. There was never in all history such an unpopular enemy as the Huns.

General Crowder is evidently quite enthusiastic about Wisconsin soldiers. His report on the Thirty-second division, now doing yeoman's duty "over there," gave him an idea of what kind of fighting men Wisconsin could furnish if asked to, and consequently he wants all he can get.

Wait until the war is over and the Rock county boys return home. The soldier with his tale, the soldier with his sword, and then the rest of us who stayed home can sit back and take the rear view when they die into "experience" to give their "experiences" and simply listen.

Uncle Sam has decided no letters shall be sent to foreign correspondents, written in Germany. If the order had been issued two years ago it would have been a wise movement in the right direction.

Apparently the English munition workers are tired of their jobs and think the nation too much employed to compel them to work or fight. They want to see before giving final judgment.

Congest traffic must be regulated unless the city is to have heavy damage suits on its hands before long. No one notices this daylight saving hour. It is to be proven we do not live by the clocks, after all.

Janesville business men have gone forth according to promise and helped harvest crops, and did just as they promised to do.

Switzerland tells us that there are a lot of German submarines doing duty off the coast of the United States, but it does not tell us where their base is located.

Our Rock county boys now over in France are having the time of their lives among those Boches a chase.

Speaking of work or fight, really the order in your line here is a farce, and the authorities know it. One wonders how conditions can keep up.

WHO'S WHO in the Daily News

VISCOUNT KIKUJIRO ISHII. The new Japanese ambassador to the United States, Viscount Kikujiro Ishii, is thoroughly trained, astute and remarkably nationalistic in his policy for his native country. He succeeded Almaro Sato, recalled.

Viscount Ishii is not a stranger in America. He was at the head of the Japanese mission which toured the country last winter. His education was obtained at the Imperial University at Tokyo.

After studying law he entered the diplomatic service, his position being that of secretary to the delegation to the League of Nations in 1919.

He subsequently spent several years in the consular service, and in 1915 held an important position in the Japanese embassy in St. Petersburg.

Returning to Japan, he was placed in charge of a bureau of commercial affairs, and in 1907 came to the United States and also visited British Columbia to supervise the adjustment of difficulties at Seattle and Vancouver over the migration of Japanese to America.

A year later he became vice minister of foreign affairs at home, serving under Goro, Hayashi, Marquis Komura, and Viscount Uchida, able Japanese statesmen in charge of their country's foreign policy.

Viscount Ishii was knighted for his services in promoting the annexation of Korea, and in 1912 went to Paris as ambassador. Three years later he became minister of foreign affairs.

THE PROGRESSIVE ARMY. Statistics show that 2,300,000 babies were born in the United States during 1917.

The nation's greatest crop is its crop of babies.—T. R.

A million men, my own Columbia. And, after that, a million more. And then, it need be, ten more million.

Will land on Europe's serried shore. For Freedom's message will "get over."

The crop reports bring splendid cheer. If man-power wins, we're right in two million every year.

Summer politics is having a terrible time trying to develop enough of a punch to entitle it to a place on the platform.

Now that paper trousers are being worn extensively in Germany, it seems that the stick-on-the-box match was invented just in time.

THE "CONTINUITIES." "They're Huns," the German junker cried. "They can't fight, that's true." Since then he's had cause to decide that the Yankee dude'll do.

It cost the Germans about $5,000 to sink a barge-load of stone off Cape Cod. Efficiency comes high, but they must have it.

It is a trait of the great American people to endeavor to achieve the impossible. Yesterday we were standing in a department store and a woman came in and said to a floor walker:

"I want to see some invisible veiling." Philadelphia bakers have agreed to use only rye flour in the making of bread.

Gentlemen who occupies the desk at our left nudged us to the effect that the making of bread is the second best use to which rye can be put.

It is reported that "Lutendorff has taken over Hindenburg's place at the Kaiser's table." No, not the dinner table. Nobody could ever hope to take Hindy's place there.

Now that the violet-plucking season is over, permanently, Herr Karl Rosner, the Kaiser's personal press agent, will soon be looking for a new job.

No use looking for a theatrical press position here in America. His press agent sufficiently convincing to lead anybody into buying an aisle seat.

Several hundred kegs of beer have been confiscated, the contents being sold. In other words, it is far beyond the draught age.

THE LITTLE ARMY

With drum and sword they march along, the soldiers brave of five and six. And down the street goes childhood's army, strong to capture every foot with sticks.

And I that have grown old and gray, sit watching them and wonder when The children of a by-gone day will find the road to home again.

Here's childhood's army passing by and boyhood's flashing sword of tin. With love night in every eye and dimpled cheek and dimpled chin; And joy will follow where they go, and victory crown each wild attack.

I smile because right well I know that soon they'll all be marching back. And yet it seems but yesterday another army marched along As young and proud and brave as they and sang the self-same battle song.

But life has called for soldiers later, and they who were but youngsters then are marching now with swords of steel and facing cannon fire as men.

With drum and sword they're passing by, the little warriors and bold. And if a tear shall dim my eye as childhood's army I behold It is because I've learned to know how swiftly youth must pass away.

And just how soon life's pleasures go when duty takes the place of play.

CHARGED WITH TAKING ONE PAIR OF TROUSERS

Arrested Yesterday Afternoon by Constable Dulin After a Two Weeks' Chase Throughout the City. Enters Plea of Not Guilty.

After two weeks of diligent searching Constable William Dulin yesterday arrested Frank Storm working at the Brick Yards. Storm was wanted for stealing a pair of trousers from John Johnson, when he was living on South Franklin street.

A warrant was issued about two weeks ago for Storm, but he became very elusive and despite the searching of Constable Dulin, he could not be located. However, Officer Dulin remained on his trail and yesterday the chase ended.

Storm was arraigned on a charge of larceny before Judge Mayfield yesterday afternoon and he entered a plea of not guilty. His trial was set for August 7th at ten o'clock.

Some days there appeared an item in the Orfordville news in the Gazette, stating that it was reported that one of our young men from Rock county had been sent to Fort Leavenworth for insubordination. The statement that such was reported is correct, but the most thorough investigation would indicate that it is merely a report as the boy's father, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. E. K. CLINTON NEWS

Clinton, July 31.—The City Hall was crowded Tuesday evening, to hear the Rev. A. J. Soidan, Lutheran pastor, at Camp Grant, give his address on the Soldier's Life. The Rev. Soidan was an interesting speaker, and his lecture was very clear and instructive.
 And listened to with a great deal of interest. It was a strong plea for ions and the people of our village and surrounding country are dotted with the blue star service flag and this first golden star brings home to the family the fact that the great struggle for our freedom goes on.

Our entire village mourns with the bereaved mother and we think that the following lines express Paul's message to his friends and family.

"Take up our quarrel with the foe,
 To you we fall and you must rise,
 For the torch is yours to hold aloft,
 If you break faith with those who die,
 We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
 In Flanders fields."

PETEY DINK—WELL, PETEY MIGHT HAVE HAD A LONG CHASE.

Gunner Depew

BY ALBERT N. DEPEW

Ex-Gunner and Chief Petty Officer U. S. Navy—Member of the American Legion of France—Captain Gun Turret, French Battleship Cassard—Winner of the Croix de Guerre.

The Turks still had the range, and they were sending a shell into the trench every once in a while, and I was knocked down again, though the shell was so far away that it knocked me down with force of habit more than anything else. I felt dizzy and shivered a lot, and kept trying to think of Murray or anything else but myself. So finally I got to the top of the little hill over which the gully ran, and on the other side I felt almost safe, just down from the crest of the hill was one of our artillery positions, with the good old "75" giving it to the Turks as fast as they could. I told the artillery officers what had happened, and a drizzle of water and thought I would take a nap. But when they telephoned the message back to division headquarters the man at the receiver said something to the officer and he told me to stay there and be ready. I thought sure he would send me back to where I came from and I knew I never could make it again, but I did not say anything.

When I looked around I saw that our position was to the right of where the artillery was, and that there were three lines of trenches with French Infantry in them. So the trenches I had come from were more like outposts than anything else, and went out off. I felt pretty sure, then, that the boys in there would never come back alive, because as soon as they got up the Turks would advance, and to keep them back our guns would have to wipe out our men, and if they did not, the Turks would. At first I was glad I had come out, but then I remembered what the artillery officer had said and I feared I would have to go back and stay with them or bring them back. Either way there was not one chance in a hundred that any of us would make it. Because when I got through it was really just a minute and nobody would have thought it could happen.

Then the officer told me to go back to the trench, where our naval guns were, and that I was detailed to them. Maybe you do not think I was glad? But there was rough work still ahead of me, because when I got behind the third line I saw a wide open field that was light gray from the shell smoke hanging over it, and I could see the flashes where the big ones were doing their work, and I had to go through that field.

I fell time and again, sometimes when I thought a shell was near, and sometimes when I had no reason for it—only I was thirsty again, and was shivering all the time, and was so weak I could not have choked a goldfish. I do not remember hardly anything about going through that field, and you might say the next thing I knew was when I was overtaken by a dispatch runner, and got in a tin tub at the side of a motorcycle and was taken to the guns.

I felt ready for a Rip Van Winkle nap then, but the officer in command would not let me. He said they were short of gunners—the terrible shelling had killed off dozens of them—and as he knew I could point a gun he had ordered them over the telephone to get me to the bench as fast as possible. He spotted the two warehouses I have spoken of for me and said it was up to us to put them out of commission. The gun was a 14-inch naval, and that looked good to me, so I bucked up a lot. The warehouses were about 10 or 11 miles away. I should judge, and about 30 or 40 yards apart. I felt very weak—as I have said, and shivered every once in a while, so I did not think I could do much gunning worth whistling at. But they loaded the old 14-inch and made ready, and we got the range and all was set. The officer told me to let her ride. So I said to myself, "This is one for you, Murray, old boy. Let's go from here."

So I sent that one along, and she landed direct and the warehouse went up in fire and smoke. I felt good then, and I laid the wires on the other warehouse and let her go. But she was too high and I made a clean miss. Then I was mad, because I had sent that one over for myself. So I got the cross wires on the warehouse again, and I said to myself, "This is not for anybody, just for luck, because I sure have had plenty of it today."

Then the juice came through the wires and into the charge, and away she went, and up went the second warehouse. That made two direct out of three, and I guess it hurt the Turks some to lose all their ammunition. The officer kissed me before I could duck and slapped me on the back and I keeled over. I was just all in.

They brought me to with rum, and they said I was singing when I came to. When they tried to sing, to show me what sort it was, I figured it was "Sweet Adeline" they meant. But I do not believe I came to singing, because I never sang "Sweet Adeline" before, that I know of, or any other song when anybody was in range. But I heard it lots of times, so maybe I did sing it at that.

Then I went to sleep feeling fine. The next morning the detachment from the Cassard was withdrawn, and I saw some of the men who had been in the two trenches, but I was not near enough to speak to them. So I do not know how they got out.

You never saw a happier bunch in your life than we were when we piled into the lifeboats and started for the Cassard. The old ship looked pretty good to us, you can bet, and we said if we never put our heads on that place again it would be soon enough.

We were shelled on our way out to the Cassard, and one boat was overturned, but the men were rescued. Two men in the launch I was in were wounded. But we did not pay any attention to that shelling—the Turks might just as well have been blowing peas at us through a soda straw for all we cared.

I noticed that when we came near the Cassard the other boats held up and let our launch get into the lead, and that we circled around the Cassard's bows and came up on the starboard side, which was unusual. But I did not think anything of it until I came over the side. There were the side boys lined up, and the Old Man was there, with the ship's steward beside him.

He took the log book from the steward and showed it to me, and there was my name on it. Now when you are punished for anything you are logged, but I could not figure out what I had done to get punished for, so I was very much surprised. But the Old Man slapped me on the back and everybody cheered, and then I saw it was not punishment, but just the opposite.

When people ask me what I have received my decoration for (Croix de Guerre), I tell them I do not rightly know, and that is a fact. I do not know whether it was for going back from those trenches or for destroying the storehouses. So I always tell them: I got it for working overtime. That is what the Limeys say, or if they have the Victoria cross they say they got it for being very careless. Ask one of them and see.

All of us were certainly glad to be aboard the Cassard again, and if any place ever looked like home to me it was the old ship. Our casualties were very high and we were therefore ordered to put back to Brest. We had a great little celebration that night, and next morning weighed anchor and started back, after clearing for action. I was still pretty blue about Murray, but very much relieved as to the safety of my own skin, and I figured that after the Dardanelles and my last day there they had not made the right bullet for me yet. The rest of us felt about the same way and we were singing all the time.

CHAPTER XV.

Je Suis Blessé.

As usual, when we got to Brest there was rush work day and night on the Cassard to get her out and supplies of all kinds were loaded for our next visit to the Turks. The French garbles were always keen for the trip back to Brest—they were sure of loading up on tobacco and other things they needed.

My twelfth trip to the Dardanelles was different from the others. The Cassard was doing patrol work at the time in the neighborhood of Cape Helles. Those of us who had served on the Peninsula before were thanking our stars for the snap we were having—just cruising around waiting for something to happen.

We had not been there very long before something unexpected did happen. For we ran into two enemy cruisers—which I afterwards heard were the Werft and Kaiserliche Marine—one on the starboard and one on the port. How they had managed to sneak up so near us I do not know. They opened up on us at not much more than a thousand yards and gave us a hot time from the start, though with any kind of gunnery they should have done for us thoroughly.

We came right back at them and were getting in some pretty good shots. I was in the 14-inch gun turret, starboard bow—my old lookout—and we were letting them have it about four shots every five minutes and scoring heavily.

I do not know how long we had been fighting when part of our range finder was carried away. It was so hot, though, and we were so hard at it that such a little thing like that did not bother us. It is hot in any gun turret, but I have always noticed that it is hotter there in the Dardanelles than in any other place. The sweat would simply "cure" up on us, until our faces were just covered with a film of powdery stuff.

But the range finder was carried away, and although it looked bad for us I was feeling so good that I volunteered to go on deck and get another one. I got outside the turret door and across the deck, got the necessary parts and was coming back with them when I received two machine-gun bullets in the right thigh. One went clear through bone and all and drilled a hole on the other side, while the other came within an inch of going through. The peculiar thing is that these two were in a line above the wound I got at Dixmude. The line is almost as straight as you could draw it with a ruler.

Of course it knocked me down and I hit my head a pretty hard crack on the steel deck, but I was able to crawl on to the turret door. Just as I was about to enter the gun was fired. That particular charge happened to be defective. The shell split and caused a back fire and the cordite, fire and gas came through the breach, which the explosion had opened.

It must have been a piece of cordite which did it, but whatever it was, it hit me in the right eye and blinded it. The ball of the eye was saved by the French surgeons and looks normal, but it pains me greatly sometimes and they tell me it will always be sightless.

Dinner Stories

A house-hunter saw an advertisement in the paper describing a charming house "within a stone's throw of the station." He made an appointment and in due course was escorted to the house in question, two miles away. When they reached the threshold he turned to the agent, suavely. "Would you mind introducing me?" he whispered, "to the person who threw that stone?"

At a political meeting the speaker made a jest, and finding that his audience had missed the point, he said playfully:

"I had hoped you would laugh at that."

Then from a remote corner of the hall a plaintive voice broke the silence: "I laughed, mister."

Then everybody did.

The juxtaposition of advertisements which are often placed in a haphazard fashion, sometimes produces a startling effect.

Even a benevolent-looking ecclesiastic smiled in the tramcar as his benign gaze traveled from "Are you eating Green's jams?" to the text underneath, "Prepare to meet thy God."

"Hello Aaron! Hear you've got married. What kind of a match did you make?" queried the first villager.

"Well, neighbor, I didn't do as well as I expected—but, to tell the truth, I don't think she did, either," his neighbor replied.

"Why do you always dine where there is an orchestra?" queried the man about town.

As a matter of precaution. Sometimes the music helps me to forget the food and sometimes the food helps me to forget the music."
